

What do I think about HR in practice ?

First of all, i am pretty negative about all the stuff EUBA has been teaching us for all 5 years, in my point of view, there were very few subjects that i really liked so far, but this is not the point of this review. This review is about HR in practice, so if i compare it to any other subject in slovak language, at least i have been practicing english a little. However, I cannot say I am really crazy about this subject, some lectures were fine, some were great, some were terribly boring, but still, during sleeping i was listening to english, so why not ? There were some lecturers who did not really attracted me into the thing at all. Some of them were 3 years (or something) after graduation at same school i am going to finish in may, i was asking myself „what could this guy possibly know better than i do?“. I have to admitt, sometimes i was right, sometimes not really but it might be also my fault, because i did not give them a chance to prove me that they were capable of doing something that may interest me. But still, if they were not able to interest me, were they a good lecturers ? 90% of being smart is being smart at the right moment. I think these guys should practice more standing in front of audience that is expecting some level of their performance. Sometimes i felt like being in the kindergarden, they were explaining things, so well known, that i thought even our cleening lady knows (no offese). Things so clear that asking them was not worth even a deep breath. And i guess i was not the only one thinking this way because the whole room usually went quiet and only some mercifull girls reacted just because they wanted to move lecture ahead. But i as i mentioned, it is still better to listen to the boring lecture in english than in slovak. And, on the other hand, i found some lectures pretty interesting, maybe the field of informations we were listening was not really different from the boring ones, but the key thing was the way it was presented. We had to keep concentrated every moment and if the lecturer saw you chasing the butterflies, he tried to catch your attention inmediately and include you into the discussed topic, he asked you question, he was interested about your opinion etc. And i have to admitt that i am not sure if i would be better speaker than they were, as they are primary managers, not teachers, so lets say, ok.

Slovakia is a small country, nobody is going to learn our language, so every chance to improve foreign language is thing you should not miss ! Business english, subject we had in first year in EUBA, subject mentioned to improve your english, did not give me as much as HR in practice did. There was a 60 years old lady(again, no offense), probably poor payed, seemed that she hated her job, knowing english only from books, considering mostly if i write word „approximately“ like oxford dictionary says- this is not right way to motivate students. Each of lecturers during HR in practise, were at least enthusiastic and full of energy, they tried to convince us that counting people is the most interesting job ever ! it's all about the attitude. Finaly, this subject was something i was looking forward to participate during my university studies (except beautiful girls).

To summarize it, HR in practice was worth to participate, it is a good idea, subject was well organized and mostly interesting. For sure, i would recommend it to everyone i know. Should i say great idea ? or should i say, gosh, why it took so long to organize something like that ?
